The “oldgrowth1312” account, which once operated another account called “redwood_pdx” on X, is tied to a man marked with an Antifa tattoo and “ACAB” across his knuckles. On Instagram, under “sapling_pdx,” he shared the same video along with images of his arsenal of firearms and ammunition.

Since Charlie Kirk's assassination on Sept. 10, the atmosphere has turned more viol on the left. Conservative figures — including myself — have been targeted with a n wave of death threats from those emboldened by the murder. Antifa Ireland posted: "Ngo next?"

Some threats are explicit, others coded. "Please make Andy Ngo leak next," wrote Portland Antifa member Albert N. Carter (b. 1987) on Bluesky, using the alias “Foodstamp.” Carter plays in the Antifa band DEADWITCH. Meanwhile, kill lists c conservative figures with Charlie Kirk’s name crossed out circulate online.

For me, none of this is new. Threats have trailed me since Portland — threats so relentless they eventually drove me to leave the United States. Staying meant riskin my life every time I stepped outside. I've seen far-left extremists post my supposed whereabouts in real time, whether in Portland or Washington, D.C., or elsewhere. Sometimes they guessed wrong. Sometimes they didn't.

In 2021, a Portland-area teacher and Antifa member came to my parents' home witl weapons. She had been researching how to make explosives. She was never charged

Those with means can hire professional security. Kirk did. But security only buys ti Threats ebb and flow. Right now, they're flowing. No one can live behind armor forever. And when a real attempt comes, it only takes one unlucky moment of exposure, one lapse in protection, for the threat to become a promise fulfilled.
